In the UK most employment law is categorised as 'civil law' or 'private law', meaning that it ' s enforced as a result of one party (the claimant) suing another (the respondent) either for compensation or some other remedy in a civil court. The claimant is normally an employee or worker, a former employee or worker, or an unsuccessful job applicant. The claimant uses the court system to allege that the respondent (their current or former employer) has caused them some kind of detriment and ...
