This module concerns issues in human resource management and organisational design. These are what ultimately implement the firm ’ s strategy. Although many organisations recognise the importance of managing the work force effectively and even "know" what approaches are effective, it is remarkable how often firms and managers fail to implement these approaches.

The ‘ hard ’ model implies that employees are a resource to be used like any other, at management ’ s discretion, in whatever way best achieves strategic objectives. Both models appear at odds with depictions of the ‘ traditional ’ British industrial relations system as wedded to voluntaristic collective bargaining, joint regulation and established procedures for the protection of workers ’ hard won rights.
